NEW QUESTION: 3

Select and Place:

Answer:

Explanation:

Explanation:

You may well find yourself in situations where you need to share the SMTP namespace across different messaging systems. For example, some of the users that share the SMTP namespace may be hosted on Exchange while some of them may be hosted on a completely different messaging system. In this case, we can make use of internal relay domains. With an internal relay domain configured, Exchange will still accept the message destined for that domain namespace. Then, Exchange will try to match the SMTP address with one configured within the Exchange organization exactly as we have seen with an authoritative accepted domain. However, if the SMTP address cannot be found within the Exchange organization, the internal relay domain configuration ensures that Exchange will route the message to the other messaging system so that delivery can be attempted there
