NEW QUESTION: 2

Which three fields are part of the AH header? (Choose three.)

- A. Destination Address
- B. Packet ICV
- C. Payload Data Type Identifier
- D. SPI identifying SA
- E. Application Port
- F. Protocol ID
- G. Source Address

Answer: B,C,D

Explanation:

The AH header contains the following fields: Next Header

Identifies the next header that uses the IP protocol ID. For example, the value might be "6" to indicate TCP. Length Indicates the length of the AH header. Security Parameters Index (SPI) Used in combination with the destination address and the security protocol (AH or ESP) to identify the correct security association for the communication. (For more information, see the "Internet Key Exchange" section later in this chapter.) The receiver uses this value to determine with which security association this packet is identified. Sequence Number Provides anti-replay protection for the SA. It is 32-bit, incrementally increasing number (starting from 1) that is never allowed to cycle and that indicates the packet number sent over the security association for the communication. The receiver checks this field to verify that a packet for a security association with this number has not been received already. If one has been received, the packet is rejected. Authentication Data Contains the Integrity Check Value (ICV) that is used to verify the integrity of the message. The receiver calculates the hash value and checks it against this value (calculated by the sender) to verify integrity.
