NEW QUESTION: 2

From an auditing perspective, database security can be broken down into four key categories: Server Security Database Connections Table Access Control Restricting Database Access Which of the following categories leads to the process of limiting access to the database server?

- A. Restricting database access
- B. Database connections
- C. Table access control
- D. Server security

Answer: D

Explanation:

Server security is the process of limiting access to the database server. This is one of the most basic and most important components of database security. It is imperative that an organization not let their database server be visible to the world. If an organization's database server is supplying information to a web server, then it should be configured to allow connections only from that web server. Also, every server should be configured to allow only trusted IP addresses. Answer B is incorrect. With regard to database connections, system administrators should not allow immediate unauthenticated updates to a database. If users are allowed to make updates to a database via a web page, the system administrator should validate all updates to make sure that they are warranted and safe. Also, the system administrator should not allow users to use their designation of "sa" when accessing the database. This gives employees complete access to all of the data stored on the database regardless of whether or not they are authenticated to have such access. Answer A is incorrect. Table access control is related to an access control list, which is a table that tells a computer operating system which access rights each user has to a particular system object. Table access control has been referred to as one of the most overlooked forms of database security. This is primarily because it is so difficult to apply. In order to properly use table access control, the system administrator and the database developer need to collaborate with each other. Answer C is incorrect. Restricting database access is important especially for the companies that have their databases uploaded on the Internet. Internet-based databases have been the most recent targets of attacks, due to their open access or open ports. It is very easy for criminals to conduct a "port scan" to look for ports that are open that popular database systems are using by default. The ports that are used by default can be changed, thus throwing off a criminal looking for open ports set by default. Following are the security measures that can be implemented to prevent open access from the Internet: Trusted IP addresses: Servers can be configured to answer pings from a list of trusted hosts only. Server account disabling: The server ID can be suspended after three password attempts. Special tools: Products can be used to send an alert when an external server is attempting to breach the system's security. One such example is RealSecure by ISS.
