NEW QUESTION: 3 A technician is investigating intermittent switch degradation. The issue only seems to occur when the building's roof air conditioning system runs. Which of the following would reduce the connectivity issues?

A. Shielding B. Add a wireless network C. Redundant HVAC systems D. Adding a heat deflector

Answer: A
Explanation: EMI can cause circuit overload, spikes, or even electrical component failure. In the question it is mentioned that switch degradation occurs when the building's roof air-conditioning system is also running. All electromechanical systems emanate EMI. Thus you could alleviate the problem using EMI shielding. Incorrect Answers: A. A heat deflector will add to more EMI emanation since it is also an electromechanical system. B. Redundant HVAC systems will not reduce the connectivity issues. D. Adding a wireless network means more work for the switch and not really addressing the issue of the switch that requires EMI shielding.
