Explanation:

Target1, Target 3: NetTcpBinding

NetTcpBinding is the right choice for binary TCP communications that cross machine boundaries.

NetTcpBinding is optimized for cross-machine communication. By default, it implements binary message encoding.

NetTcpBinding specifies a secure, reliable, optimized binding suitable for cross-machine communication.

By default, it generates a run-time communication stack with transport security and Windows authentication as default security settings. It uses the Transmission Control Protocol (TCP) for message delivery, and binary message encoding.
