NEW QUESTION: 2 A business unit of a transnational manufacturer wants to implement a robust process for addressing integrity-critical equipment deterioration incidents. Timely and complete resolution of such incidents is vital for the business unit's continuous safe and profitable operation. Treating each incident involves many employees from different departments extensively collaborating and exchanging information. That information is spread across multiple systems having their access limited to particular user groups. With the current manual process, some incidents get forgotten and remain unresolved for years. The project's Sponsor is an Equipment Integrity and Reliability Advisor, who moved into this position from another business unit. That business unit implemented a proprietary application to integrate the information and to assist in tracking and managing the incidents. Having a positive experience with the application, the Sponsor is suggesting to customize it and reuse in the new business unit. The business unit's Enterprise Architect (EA), who is responsible for assessing solution options and presenting them to executive decision makers, has a few concerns with adopting the existing application. The application uses point-to-point interfaces with other data sources whereas the business unit's target architecture relies on a data warehouse-based integration. Moreover, the two business units use different legacy systems, as well as different front-end implementation technologies. Additionally, the existing application is monolingual, while the business unit needs user interfaces and some data to be presented in two languages. With all of this, it may be easier to build a new application from scratch than to customize the existing one. To understand which option is better, the EA asks a business analyst (BA) to define business requirements. With the team ready to consider design options, they are reviewing the following requirement: "Appropriate stakeholders shall be timely and reliably notified on incident-related events." What quality criteria does this requirement fail to satisfy? A. Atomic B. Understandable C. Consistent D. Complete Answer: C

NEW QUESTION: 3 Which of the following are primary objectives of cash forecasting? I) Managing liquidity II) Optimizing float III) Enhancing financial control IV) Minimizing borrowing costs A. I, III, and IV only B. II and III only C. I and II only D. I, II, III, and IV Answer: A

NEW QUESTION: 4 The Clark-Wilson Integrity Model (d. Clark, d. Wilson, A Comparison of Commercial and Military Computer Security Policies, Proceedings of the 1987 IEEE Computer Society Symposium on Research in Security and Privacy, Los Alamitos, CA, IEEE Computer Society Press, 1987) focuses on what two concepts? A. Well-formed transactions and denial of service B. Capability lists and domains C. Least privilege and well-formed transactions D. Separation of duty and well-formed transactions Answer: D Explanation: The Clark-Wilson Model is a model focused on the needs of the commercial world and is based on the theory that integrity is more important than confidentiality for commercial organizations. Further, the model incorporates the commercial concepts of separation of duty and wellformed transactions. The well-formed transaction of the model is implemented by the transformation procedure (TP.) ATP is defined in the model as the mechanism for transforming the set of constrained data items (CDIs) from one valid state of integrity to another valid state of integrity. The Clark-Wilson Model defines rules for separation of duty that denote the relations between a user, TPs, and the CDIs that can be operated upon by those TPs. The model talks about the access triple that is the user, the program that is permitted to operate on the data, and the data. The other answers are distracters.
