NEW QUESTION: 2

Erin needs to create a group in Ansible that contains all hosts in the inventory file. When the playbook is run, it will use the variables assigned to the group, even if the variables are specified in a single playbook run. The respective variables will be available to the play. This is the easiest method to run, maintain and write.

Which of the following methods should she use to create the group?

A. Create a group in the inventory file. When the playbook is run, it will use the variables assigned to the group, even if the variables are specified in a single playbook run. The respective variables will be available to the play. This is the easiest method to run, maintain and write.

B. Create a group in the inventory file. When the playbook is run, it will use the variables assigned to the group, even if the variables are specified in a single playbook run. The respective variables will be available to the play. This is the easiest method to run, maintain and write.

C. Create a group in the inventory file. When the playbook is run, it will use the variables assigned to the group, even if the variables are specified in a single playbook run. The respective variables will be available to the play. This is the easiest method to run, maintain and write.

D. Create a group in the inventory file. When the playbook is run, it will use the variables assigned to the group, even if the variables are specified in a single playbook run. The respective variables will be available to the play. This is the easiest method to run, maintain and write.

Answer: A

Explanation:

While all four answers provided are correct, only B is the best choice. Ansible offers the ability to assign variables to groups of hosts in the inventory file. When the playbook is run it will use the variables assigned to the group, even all the groups are specified in a single playbook run. The respective variables will be available to the play. This is easiest method to run, maintain and write.
