NEW QUESTION: 3A customer is concerned about having separate ISL's in its SAN to handle both FICON andFCP replication traffic originating from its z13 system.Which technology addresses this concern?A. FECB.B. FIDRC.C. Mainframe SAN Fabric

PriorityD. FICON Express 16S
Answer: B
Explanation: Potential bandwidth consolidation/ISL consolidation. For many years the SAN vendor and IBM have recommended keeping FCP traffic (such as PPRC/Metro Mirror) and FICON traffic on their own ISLs or own group of ISLs-in other words segregate the traffic types. With FIDR, it's now possible to take advantage of FIDR and share ISLs among previously segregated traffic.
Note: FICON Dynamic Routing (FIDR). Another performance-relevant function that is available with newer FICON cards such as the z13 offers is the FIDR function. Here, when considering many paths in a SAN, for example, with a larger number of inter-switch links (ISLs), the traditional static routing often led to imbalanced ISLs with not all available bandwidth used. FIDR, using dynamically assigned Exchange IDs for each I/O, leads to an optimally balanced SAN, what converts into a bigger effective regain of SAN ISL bandwidth.
