When determining the optimum usage of capacity a supply manager determines they want to understand how much their process deviates from a competitors. Which measure of forecast accuracy would be the BEST fit?

- A. All of the above.
- B. The mean percentage error or forecast error.
- C. Mean square error of the square of errors.
- D. Standard error rates of the distribution.

Answer: D

Explanation:

When determining the optimum usage of capacity a supply manager determines they want to understand how much their process deviates from a competitors. Standard error rates of the distribution would be the BEST fit. Mean square error of the square of errors is the forecasted value from the actual value, the mean percentage error or forecast error tells the value over time as a percentage, and all of the above, is incorrect.
