NEW QUESTION: 1

You need to migrate a UFS file system named /production_ufs to a ZFS file system named /production_ufs. The /production_ufs file system cannot be taken down or be out of production during the migration, and the current /production_ufs file system must remain active until the /production_zfs file system is copied and ready. Which method allows you to meet both requirements?

1 . Copy live data from /production_ufs to /production_zfs while /production_ufs is in use.

2 . When the copy is complete, /production_zfs will contain an up-to date copy of /production_ufs

A. Create a snapshot of the UFS file system. Create the new ZFS file system. Use `cpio` to copy data from the snapshot to the new ZFS file system.

B. Mirror the existing UFS file system by using SVM. After both submissions are in sync, migrate one of the submissions to a ZFS file System by using Live Upgrade.

C. Create the new zfs file system by using the `zfs create -o shadow`.

D. Create the new ZFS file system by using `zfs create import` to import data from the existing UFS file system into the new ZFS file system

E. Create a new Boot Environment. Create the ZFS file system. Use `lucreate -m` to copy data from the Current UFS file system to the new ZFS file system.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Migrating Data With ZFS Shadow Migration

ZFS shadow migration is a tool you can use to migrate data from an existing file system to a new file system. A shadow file system is created that pulls data from the original source as necessary.

You can use the shadow migration feature to migrate file systems as follows:

- * A local or remote ZFS file system to a target ZFS file system
- * A local or remote UFS file system to a target ZFS file system

Shadow migration is a process that pulls the data to be migrated:

- * Create an empty ZFS file system.
- * Set the shadow property on an empty ZFS file system, which is the target (or shadow) file system, to point to the file system to be migrated.

For example:

zfs create -o shadow=nfs://system/export/home/ufldata
users/home/shadow2

* Data from file system to be migrated is copied over to the shadow file system.
