NEW QUESTION: 3
Which of the following describes how deadlocks may occur and how InnoDB resolves them?
A. InnoDB resolves deadlocks by terminating and rolling back both of the deadlocking transactions.
B. InnoDB resolves deadlocks by terminating and rolling back one of the deadlocking transactions.
C. Deadlocks happen anytime when more than one lock is placed in a table.
D. Deadlocks happen when two transactions both have locks that the other is waiting for the release of the lock that the other holds.
Answer: B,D
Explanation:
Explanation:
29.4.4. InnoDB Locking Characteristics Deadlock can occur.
Deadlock is a situation in which each of two transactions is waiting for the release of alock that the other holds. For example, if two transactions each lock a different row, and then try to modify therow locked by the other, they can deadlock. Deadlock is possible because InnoDB does not acquire locksduring a transaction until they are needed. When InnoDB detects a deadlock, it terminates and rolls backone of the deadlocking transactions. It tries to pick the transaction that has modified the smallest number ofrows. If InnoDB does not detect deadlock, the deadlocked transactions eventually begin to time out andInnoDB rolls them back as they do.
