Capital investments require balancing risk and return. Managers have a responsibility to ensure that the investments that they make in their own firms increase shareholder value. Managers have met that responsibility if the return on the capital investment:

- A. Is less than the rate of return associated with the firm's beta factor.
- B. Exceeds the rate of return associated with the firm's beta factor.

Answer: B

Choice "a" is correct. A capital investment whose rate of return exceeds the rate of return associated with the firm's beta factor will increase the value of the firm. Choice "b" is incorrect. A capital investment whose rate of return is less than the rate of return associated with the firm's beta factor will decrease the value of the firm. Choice "c" is incorrect. The return on a capital investment in relation to the prime rate of return will not necessarily indicate if the investment increases or decreases the value of the company without knowing the relative risk of the firm in relation to the market and its relationship to the prime rate. Choice "d" is incorrect. The return on a capital investment in relation to the prime rate of return will not necessarily indicate if the investment increases or decreases the value of the company without knowing the relative risk of the firm in relation to the market and its relationship to the prime rate.
