Which of the following is not an effective principle for guiding a manager's use of leadership techniques?

- A. Serve as a model of the behavior expected from others.
- B. Value accountability.
- C. Follow written procedures at all times.
- D. Value differences.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Leadership is the act or process of influencing, inspiring, and guiding people so they will strive willingly toward the achievement of group objectives through common effort. Much management research has been devoted to determining the traits of leaders, leadership styles, and the situations in which particular styles are effective. However, a blind focus on internal process is a habit of administration, not of leadership. A manager of this type is called a bureaucratic leader. In the absence of a specific policy or procedure, (s)he seeks guidance from the next level of management. In some situations, for example, when employees handle cash or highly delicate or dangerous equipment or chemicals, bureaucratic leadership may be needed.
