*If you undeploy the default revision of the SOA composite application (for example, 2.0), the next active, available revision of the application is automatically designated as the new default (for example, 1.0).
*You can no longer configure and monitor this revision of the application.
*You can no longer process instances of this revision of the application.
*The state of currently running instances is changed to stale and no new messages sent to this composite are processed.
*A warning message is displayed at the end of this wizard when you undeploy the default composite revision.
