NEW QUESTION: 1Full Atomicity, Consistency, Isolation, Durability (ACID) compliance is a necessity for a new application, which heavily reads and writes data. This requires the following config file options: Sync_binlog=1 Innodb_flush_log_at_trx_commit=1 Innodb_doublewrite=1 However, this configuration is expected to introduce disk I/O overhead. What three changes will reduce disk I/O overheads? A. Allocation of RAM to the buffer pool such that more of the data can fit in RAM B. Use of soft links for database directories on the same physical disk C. Use of separate directories on the same physical disk for log files and data files D. Use of delay_key_write=ON for batch index update E. Placement of InnoDB log files and datadir on separate physical disks Answer: A,D,E Explanation: C (not A, not B): Use separate disk Not A: Using symbolic links This means that, for MyISAM tables, you symlink the index file and data files from their usual location in the data directory to another disk (that may also be striped). This makes both the seek and read times better, assuming that the disk is not used for other purposes as well. Reference: 8.11.3 Optimizing Disk I/O
