A. The collector manager can run both javascript and proprietary Collectors simultaneously. It functions differently for the different collector types.
B. Each Collector Manager can run only one type of collector - javascript or proprietary. You must choose one option when installing the collector
C. Each collector Manager can run either Javascript or proprietary Collectors, but only one type at a time. You can configure this in the Event source Management interface.
D. Each collector manager can run either Javascript or proprietary Collectors, but only one type at a time. You can configure this in the configuration xml file.

Answer: C
Explanation:Note:
*Collector builder: An Integrated Development Environment (IDE) for building custom Collectors to collect from unique or proprietary systems
*Proprietary Collectors, written in Novell's own language, always use variables based on the short tag to refer to event fields. The short tag name must be prefaced by a letter and underscore, where the letter indicates the data type for the field (i_ for integer, s_ for string).
*JavaScript Collectors usually refer to event fields using an "e." followed by the same user-friendly label set in Event Configuration in the Sentinel Control Center. For a Sentinel system with a default configuration, for example, the Initiator User Name would be referred to as "e.InitUserName" in the JavaScript Collector.
